546. Bowler, Earl M. The Postwar Three R's. Industrial Arts and Vocational Education, Sept., 1944. 33:7:263-264.

Rehabilitation of the disabled, retraining of workers for peacetime activity and realigning of curriculum to better meet needs of the 16- to 20-year-old group are Mr. Bowler's "three R's."

"Before training for postwar employment is started, someone should determine whether workers can be placed in big industries where single-skilled operators are wanted, or whether the one-man business on main street is going to absorb the returning soldier and warworker. ... Long before 'X Day,' big business should have stated a willingness to place in the ranks a force of employees recovered from the pool of rehabilitated ex-servicemen. The ratio of handicaps in such plants should equal the ratio of handicapped to the general population, and, what is more, these workers should be in addition to those returning to jobs formerly held with the plant."

547. Brown, Lt. Col. James B., A.M.C. Reconstructive Surgery. The Trained Nurse and Hospital Review, Sept., 1944. 113:3:182-185. [more]

A cerebral palsied woman tells of her education, from her first lessons in her own home "at the turn of the century" through four years of art school. Before World War I she painted china and later did other commercial art work. For the past sixteen years she has operated a gift shop and rental library.

554. Coulter, John S., M.D. Occupational Therapy in a Private General Hospital. The Journal of the American Medical Association, Oct. 7, 1944. 126:6:360-367.

"Most private general hospitals will soon require a department of physical medicine (physical and occupational therapy) in order to carry out the federal-state programs for crippled children, the federal-state programs of physical and vocational rehabilitation and to enable them to care properly for many casualties of civilian industry.

"Some insurance companies have begun to establish physical and occupational therapy departments as curative workshops or rehabilitation centers, as units separated entirely from hospitals. The advantage of this plan is that the patient does not feel that he is returning to the hospital for treatment, but the one disadvantage of the plan is that the doctor who originally treated the patient does not see him often."

The occupational therapy department at St. Luke's Hospital in Chicago is described.

555. Coulter, John S., M.D. A Rehabilitation Center for the Injured Worker. Archives of Physical Therapy, Sept., 1944. 25:9:529-539,570.
